NINETEEN INJURED IN WRECK

Rear-End Collision on New York Central Occurs Early Saturday Near Syracuse

PULLMAN SPLIT OPEN

Engine Derailed, Traffic on Main Line Halted; Injured Rushed to Syracuse Hospitals

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 30.—Nineteen persons were injured, one probably fatally when train Number 47, the Detroiter, westbound on the New York Central, crashed into the rear of train Number 19, the Lake Shore limited, also westbound, two miles west of Savannah, N. Y., shortly after one o'clock this morning.

All of the injured, it was announced, were sent to Syracuse hospitals on special relief trains.

The two trains came together 100 feet east of a block signal just as the Lake Shore Limited was passing under the block and just as the red danger signal was automatically dropping.

The Pullman Jacomby, a sleeper, on the Lake Shore Limited, was the last car in the train and every compartment was filled, owing to Labor Day traffic.

The engine of the Detroiter plowed 25 feet into the Lake Shore's rear end.

The Jacomby was split wide open and the trucks were driven up to the center of the car.

The impact derailed the Detroiter engine, separated the engine from the tender, spilled the coal over four tracks of the central main line and blocked all traffic, both east and west bound.

The baggage car, the first of the Detroiter, was badly wrecked. The roof was split in two and the trunks so thrown about that they split open.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30—The rear-end collision between the Detroiter, bound from New York to Detroit, and the Lake Shore Limited, New York to Chicago, near Seneca, N. Y., early today was caused when the air line on the limited broke and automatically caused the brakes to set, officers of the road here said. The Detroiter was only five minutes behind.

One young woman on the Detroiter was unofficially reported to have suffered a fractured skull. Her name was not available.

Conductor Laas of the Lake Shore Limited reported to headquarters that no one was seriously injured on his train.

The auto was abandoned half a mile away. It had been stolen.

PRINCE IS GUEST OF COOLIDGES

Heir to British Throne Tosses Monkey Wrench in Plans of Aides for Departure

HAS SPECIAL TRAIN

Stays in Berth While Thousands Wait in Station to Get Glimpse of Noted Guest

NEW YORK, Aug. 30—Using the prerogative of a prince who is heir to the throne of an empire, the Prince of Wales left the home prepared for him, spent last night on the special car provided for his trip and was asleep when his train left the Pennsylvania station at 8:55 eastern daylight saving time, for Washington, where he was to lunch today with President and Mrs. Coolidge.

Arrangements had been made to call the prince at 6 a. m. today in order that he might be ready to board his special car in time for an early run to Washington. The prince listened attentively while his aides arranged their plans and then tossed the royal monkey wrench into the machinery by saying that he did not intend to arise at such an hour.

Accordingly, baggage, guests and other necessities were sent aboard business car Number 90, the special car belonging to the president of the Pennsylvania railroad. The prince himself followed at 2 a. m.

Apparently the British heir put in some restless hours after he left the Burden estate and boarded the car between the hours of 3 and 4 watchers were surprised to see him emerge to the observation platform of his car. He was smoking a cigarette and was fully dressed.

The special train, consisting of an engine, a combination baggage and passenger coach, a Pullman sleeper and the prince's special car, had been parked on a siding behind the Burden estate, where the prince is a guest during his

Pennsylvania - av Is Crowded When Prince Arrives

(By H. K. REYNOLDS)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—Pennsylvania-av from the capitol to the white house took on a holiday aspect during the morning as crowds began to assemble to view the passage of the Prince of Wales, who is due to arrive in the capital early this afternoon for luncheon at the white house with the president and Mrs. Coolidge.

No efforts will be made by the police who will guard the prince's route from the Union station to the executive mansion, to keep the crowds away from the automobile carrying the heir to the British throne, it being the purpose of the federal and municipal authorities to keep the visit of the prince as free as possible from all indications of pomp or ceremony.

Secretary of State Hughes will be at the Union station to meet the prince when he steps from the train here. He will welcome him to the capital and will then accompany him to the white house to introduce him formally to the president and Mrs. Coolidge.

After a short rest for the prince after his train ride from New York, an informal luncheon will be served. There will be only four at the table—the prince, the president and Mrs. Coolidge and their son John. After the luncheon members of the cabinet, accompanied by their wives but no other members of their families, will call at the white house to meet the prince. Acording to plans this morning the prince will remain at the executive mansion during his entire stay in Washington, not making the intended tour of the capital that marked his official visit here in November, 1919.

The usual squadron of cavalry which escorts distinguished foreign visitors about Washington will be lacking during the prince's visit today, altho a detachment of mounted police will be held in readiness to accompany the prince if he has no objections to the display.

SAVE $35,000,000 IN GOLD FROM TORPEDOED LINER.

With the exception of a few stray bars, the entire $35,000,000 in gold bullion has been recovered by divers from the White Star liner Laurentic, torpedoed and sunk off Lough Swilly, Ireland, by a German submarine in 1917. The eleventh hour discovery of an unexpected storing place in the bow of the vessel, sunk in 90 feet of water, yielded the last $2,000,000. The divers, under Frederick Maskell, a deep-sea diver of 20 years' experience, have worked for six years recovering the gold consignd to American bankers. Rare gems, too, were recovered from the skeletons of passengers. The British Admiralty salvage ship "Racer" was anchored over the wreck, and from her the divers descended. The men on the "Racer" are shown searching through mud, brought up by suction tubes from the wreck, for gold and jewels.

NINE ARE KILLED IN EXPLOS'N

Sheet of Flame Strikes Down All Within 300-Ft. Radius When Gasoline Tank Lets Go

THREE ARE CHILDREN

Investigation Difficult as No Witnesses Lived to Tell the Story; Two Probes Started

PITTSBURG, Aug. 30—Two official investigations were launched today to determine responsibility for explosion of a huge gasoline tank in the garage of the Peoples Natural Gas Co., in the Soho district, taking a toll of nine lives and four seriously injured.

Coroner W. J. McGregor hurriedly returned to Pittsburg today to probe the blast and city building inspectors are also investigating to ascertain why an office of the gas company was allowed above the garage.

The victims, three of them small children, were trapped by a fierce sheet of flame that swept the three story building housing the garage and singed houses in a radius of 300 yards. None of those close enough to have known what caused the explosion have lived to tell their story, and officials today had roped off the scene of the blast to enable them to make a thoro investigation of its cause.

The explosion came into yesterday afternoon just before street cars carrying homeward bound officer workers were passing the garage.

Altho no actual account of the explosion itself could be obtained it was believed that fumes leaking from a gasoline truck that was being emptied into the 1,000-gallon under ground tank of the garage were ignited when they drifted to a blacksmith shop next door and set fire to the truck when the sheet of flame flashed back to it.

Investigating officials lost their last hope for an eye witness account of the accident when Harry Jessup, 33, died in Mercy hospital this morning. He was the ninth victim to succumb after writhing in horrible agony.

Depression Result of State of Public Mind, Henry Ford Believes

ST. CATHERINES, ONT., Aug. 29—Henry Ford believes the depression in business is largely due to the state of the public mind. His own factories will continue running with full forces all winter, he said, in an interview today.

"This is a time for people to keep their heads and maintain a sane viewpoint" said Ford.. "If the industralists will plan for steady production, but not over production, there are no shoals ahead for industry, in my belief."

Ford, who passed thru the Welland canal on his yacht, Sihalia, on his way home to Detroit, walked with a reporter along the towpath for three blocks and discussed business and others matters.

He declared that with incoming population, there could be no holding back Canada.

"Dire things can never happen on this continent," he said, "because the basic stock of population is the best in the world."

"The time is coming," said Ford, "when Canada will no longer import coal from the United States. The 'white coal' age is coming rapidly. Even the water over there," pointing to the canal waste water, "should be utilized for power development."

The manufacturer also expressed a strong opinion that the new Welland ship canal would be the natural forerunner of the development of the St. Lawrence and that Canada would not derive the full advantage of the new canal unless the St. Lawrence water way were made possible for larger craft.

The present high price of wheat has been artificially created by gambling operations, Ford charged.

"Down in Montreal," Ford said, "There are boat loads and boat loads awaiting shipment. If there was a real shortage with thousands of boats in the world looking for tonnage do you mean to say that wheat would not in transit right?" he asked.

"These fluctuations are caused by gambling. They come from other causes than a natural world shortage in acreage or production."

purpose of carrying out the project according to most successful modern methods.

From the 135 pullets reared, 120 were culled for winter layers, and the remaining 15 were sold at one dollar per head. The cockerels had previously been sold for broilers at a satisfactory figure on the local market.

To house the layers the Finlays built an up-to-date 16x28 half-monitor Ohio house, complete with self-feeders, thermos waterers, sectional nests and large feed bins. Two days before the pullets were five months of age nine eggs were gathered from them. During the month of October a net profit of $16 was realized from the flock, in November $53.60, in December $52.80, and each month following, a regularly decreasing profit, until in May it equaled that made in October.

Last April, the second year of the business was started. 300 White Leghorn and 200 Rhode Island Red baby chicks were received from a commercial hatchery. From these 500, 280 White Leghorns and 133 Rhode Island Reds have been reared, this summer. They were reared in the 10x12 brooder house until about eight weeks of age, when 480 Barred Rock baby chicks were secured from a hatchery,to be reared for holiday capons and early spring layers.

In order to provide for the housing of the older chicks young Finlay bot in Coshocton four piano boxes, which he converted unassisted into a 10x12 brooder house, with only the addition of roofing, windows and foundation skids. The Leghorns and Reds are now being housed in the piano-box house, and the Rocks are being reared in the Ohio colony house.

The 120 yearling Leghorn hens in the half-monitor laying house are now being closely culled according to approved scientific methods. With what are left of these after culling, and the best of the White Leghorn pullets reared this season, a flock of 200 Leghorns will be made up for layers, in the 16x28 house, the coming winter. The two brooder houses will also perhaps be filled with winter layers.

To provide a laying house for the Rhode Island Red pullets, the coming winter, the old style chicken house on the Finlay farm, formerly used by Mrs. Ed Finlay in her poultry operations, will be remodeled into a modern practical house. In it will perhaps be kept, thruout the winter, about 75 Red pullets.

Next year's poultry operations on the Finlay farm will, according to present plans, include a number of additions. Two Ohio multiple laying houses will perhaps be built, and three crops of chicks will perhaps be reared—one for early broilers, one for winter layers and one for holiday capons and spring layers.

Thruout the successful operations on the Finlay farm much credit has been due Mrs. Ed Finlay, according to her son, Dinsmore, and Director Ross. While the son was in school in Coshocton, from morning until evening, she cared for the laying hens and the chicks, during the summers she late lent her aid in the market ing of the broilers and eggs, and thru the entire project she has cooperated to the fullest measure with the vocational department in making the work a success.

Wheeler revealed that the committee has already formally urged Attorney General Harlan F. Stone to "get rid of the warden of the Atlanta penitentiary because of alliance between the warden and Daugherty, and further because the sale of narcotics was going on."

Remus' charges will be thoroly investigated by the committee which is scheduled to resume [illegible] as about the middle of November, Wheeler indicated. Until that time the committee, Wheeler said, would take no official cognizance of Remus' affidavit.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 29—A. E. Sartain, warden of the federal penitentiary here, emphatically denied today that he in any way influenced George Remus to make the affidavit yesterday in which Remus charged that investigators for the Wheeler-Brookhart senatorial committee promised him his immediate freedom if "he would help frame former Attorney General H. M. Daugherty." Sartain said Remus made the affidavit of his own will and without any outside pressure whatever as far as he knows.

"In fact," Sartain said, "the whole thing was handled by my chief deputy, Fletcher. I knew that he had called in representatives of the press at Mr. Remus' request but I knew absolutely nothing about what the prisoner wished to say."

Fletcher likewise denied that Remus was "forced" to make the statement as charged by Senator Burton K. Wheeler. Remus, joining with the two said, the affidavit was given of his own free will and added that he that the prison officials were "damnably nice" in issuing invitation to newspapers for him. In the affidavit, Remus charged that Harry Stern, an attorney aiding the Wheeler-Brookhart committee had offered him his immediate freedom if he would assist in "framing" the former attorney general. Asked to swear to this statement which Remus will he swore before the committee that he paid the late Jesse Smith's "protection money" on several occasions while operating his Ohio bootleg ring.

The statement repudiates all of this testimony, Remus saying that he had never seen Jesse Smith in his life, as far as he knew. His sole object in making the affidavit, he said, was to vindicate Daugherty as far as possible because he had gotten a "dirty deal," and to reveal the "plot" for revenge against members of the committee who failed to keep their "gentlemen's agreement."

state and their own nation in every lawful and law abiding way. It is the prime remedy for selfishness.

"A knowledge of these principels and these ideals is among the most precious of human possessions.

"Sometimes, I have that that we do not place emphasis enough upon the homely virtues, or sufficiently appreciate the common blessings of life.

"The desire for advancement, the wish for something more, ought not to make us mindful of the place we now hold and the possessions we now have. The spirit of contentment is one which is well worth cultivating.

"We Americans are constantly criticised for the eagerness with which we seek wealth and power. I doubt if we are any more vicious and grasping than those of other nations, tho I admit we possess the enterprize which makes us more successful.

"It seems perfectly apparent that the real satisfactions in life are not found in great possessions. We must necessarily come to the conclusion that we shall find the real satisfaction of life in some other directions."

OMAHA, Nebr., Aug. 29—An advance guard of 30 Republicans from Lincoln, greeted General Charles G. Dawes, Republican vice presidential candidate when he arrived here today enroute to the state capital where he will speak tonight in the University of Nebraska Stadium.

Members of the committee say a good crowd of Dawes from all over Nebraska will be present when the candidate starts his agricultural address, which will be his second speech of the campaign.

In the delegation were many former neighbors and business associates of General Dawes who remember him as a young lawyer, who found his first success in Lincoln, in the 7 year following his graduation from law school."

An elaborate program was arranged by the Republican state central committee which started immediately upon Dawes' arrival. He was escorted to the Lindell hotel, where he is to meet chairman Harry Sackett and other members of the committee as well as newspapermen of the state.

From the balcony of the hotel the general will review an automobile parade in which there will be cars from every county in the state.

The evening meeting will be held at 8 o'clock.

be on duty for the Labor Day game at New Philadelphia.

Cain said it was unofficial that the Caldwell club had broken up and that he had to obtain his release from that club in order to play with the Regulars. He feels that he will be able to get his release and that he will become a member of the Coshocton Regulars.

Emmett Cain will become the property of the Regulars next season. Both the Cain boys will be active on the local club next season. There is a chance of Emmett Cain figuring in some games here before the season closes.

Just what future plans the retiring manager of the Brunswick has made, could not be learned from him Friday. He has operated the Brunswick for the past several years. The pool room is in a good location. The Cain boys are popular here and will no doubt enjoy a good business in this city.

SEVEN ARE KILLED AT CROSSING

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 29. — Seven persons are dead here and an eighth, all members of the same family, was reported dying today, the result of a grade crossing accident late yesterday at Perrysburg, a small village in Wood-co, 12 miles south of here on the Dixie highway.

The dead:

Cyrus Updegraff, 71.

Mrs. Hattie Uudegraff, 62, his wife.

Jesse Updegraff, 40, son.

Mrs. Bertha Updegraff, 33, wife of Jesse.

Helen, 13, Alfred 3, and Fern, 4 months, children of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Updegraff.

Cyrus Updegraff, 9, another child is in a hospital here today in such serious condition that his death is momentarily expected.

The Updegraffs' who lived at Six Points, Wood-co, were returning from a family reunion of the Baird-Pelton family at Walbridge park, Toledo. The crossing of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad where the accident occurred was said to be extremely dangerous, because of the inability of the driver to see clearly. The auto was crossing the track when a fast passenger train, said to have been travelling 50 to 60 miles per hour, struck the Ford touring car and crumpled it into nothing but junk. Bodies of members of the family, horribly mangled, were spread along the right of way for more than 400 feet. The body of Mrs. Bertha Updegraff was found on the pilot of the engine

COMFORTS JUDGE CAVERLY IN CRUCIAL HOURS.

MRS JOHN R. CAVERLY, WIFE

Knowing that the eyes of the world are upon him, and that he, and he alone, must fix the fate of "Dickie" Loeb and "Babe" Leopold, slayers of little Robert Franks, of Chicago, in a decision that will be flashed around the world, it is small wonder that Judge John R. Caverly showed the terrible strain of the long drawn-out hearing. When he retired into seclusion to make his momentous decision Mrs. Caverly accompanied him to cheer him up.

W. VA. STATE FAIR OPENS LABOR DAY

On the eve of the beginning of the West Virginia State Fair, at Wheeling, which opens Labor Day, September 1st, for six days and six nights, the greatest exhibition in the forty-four years' history of the institution is assured. Entries that have poured into Secretary Bert Swartz's office render certain a large and fine display of live stock, 4-H club work, women's handiwork, school exhibits, horticultural and agricultural products, etc. The display of the United States Department of Agriculture, and also that of the West Virginia Department of Agriculture, are being installed in the new quarter million dollar Exposition Building.

The $40,000.00 racing card will be the "best ever." Entries for the harness races have closed with a fine list named, while carload after carload of thoroughbred horses have been unloaded at the grounds.

The program of hippodrome and circus acts is a classy one, headed by Powell's Elephant troupe, and including such star attractions as the Bud Snyder & Blatch Co., the Baggage Smashers, the Hori Japs, the Daring Cromwells, the Frisco Musical Seals, Daredevil Curran and his 70-ft. golden pole, and May Collier, the diving Venus, who will make a sensational 80-ft. drive into a four-foot tank of water. Lampham's Singing Jazz Band, with instrumental and vocal soloists, including Elizabeth Roderick, the "Girl with the Golden Voice," will be the chief musical attraction.

The midway will be composed of the handsome permanent rides and other attractions of State Fair Park, supplemented with other high-class concessions.

The mammoth night show will be held each of the six nights, with the program of hippodrome and circus acts topped off by a magnificent fireworks spectacle.

Execution Stay Is Granted Foe of Soviet Gov't

MOSCOW, Aug. 29.—A stay of execution and a recommendation of mercy were granted today to Boris Savinkoff, minister of war in the Kerensky cabinet, who was sentenced to death after having been found guilty of stirring up counter revolts against the Soviet.

Savinkoff told of his plotting and admitted receiving money from the French and the Czechs. He said he had held conferences with former Premier David Lloyd-George of England; Winston Churchill, former British colonial secretary, and former President Alexandre Millerand, of France. Sentence was imposed upon Savinkoff last night after a sensational trial.

"I have made a mistake," said the former war minister addressing the Red tribunal. "I recognize the power of the soviets. I expected a death sentence and I do not ask any pity from you. But the revolutionary conscience will remind you that I, too, was a revolutionary."

Savinkoff was arrested while crossing the border disguised as a refugee. He had just come from Paris. The prisoner was brot to Moscow with much secrecy.

Savinkoff was put on trial, the state charging that he came to Russia to "organize terrorism against Soviet leaders." The trial was conducted without a public prosecutor or any counsel for the defense. Savinkoff pleaded his own case, saying it must be remembered that he organized the assassination of Minister Pleve and Grand Duke Sergius and that he led the first revolution in 1905.

Annie Laurie Advises Local Correspondents

Dear Annie Laurie:

What answer can I give a young man, without hurting his feelings, when I do not care to dance with him?

X. Y. Z.

X. Y. Z.: It is always difficult to avoid hurting a young man's feelings when you refuse to dance with him. But if for some special reason you do not wish to do so, it is plausible to say that you are tired or too hot or that you have promised to dance or sit out with someone else .

ANNIE LAURIE.

'Lady Hobo,' 79, Rides Rods and Defies Old Age

Slaps Chicago Judge on the Back and Invites Him to Visit Her in Nevada

CHICAGO, Aug. 30.—There isn't any twilight to a well lived life—in fact, a hundred and twenty years doesn't mean a thing to a nice, robust woman who leaves off corsets and high boots, hikes fifty miles a day, works in the gold mines, "rides the rods" every now and then, and keeps herself young in general.

At least, so says Mrs. Herbert Jester, a seventy-three-year-old youngster, who "just hopped a freight and came on up to Chicago to transact a little business." Mrs. Jester lives away out in Goldfield, Nevada.

Most of Mrs. Jester's life has been spent doing things other women are afraid to do. She got right down to earth while quite young and hasn't left it since.

"I stand straighter and I'm stronger then most men," said she. "Why, when I was working in the gold mines of Nevada I tramped fifty miles a day with the best of men and spent half the night nursing the sick ones."

Mrs. Jester is a "lady hobo" She was arrested when she blew into Chicago on a freight from Colorado. And after she looked Judge John L. Lupe, of the West Chicago police court, in the eye for a few minutes, the judge told her to go on and attend to her business.

"All right, judge," said the veteran, with a hearty thump on the middle of his back. "Happy days! And when you come out to Goldfield, in Nevada, I'll have the doors wide open!"

Then, while the judge coughed and struggled to regain his shattered dignity and collect his scattered senses, the seventy-three-year-old "lady hobo" shifted her coat and worn felt hat, almost the same color as her bronzed throat and arms, to the other hand and went right on:

"And, my boy, it don't make any difference when you come; I'm going to live another fifty or sixty years yet — you've got plenty of time."

She explained she made the trip by hopping any freight that ran slow enough and eating anything edible she found.

"My husband's fifty-six," she explained. "He didn't feel equal to the trip, and we had some business to attend to up here. When you want to get home place and haven't any money, what're you gonna do?"

Mrs. Jester was born in Coblenz, Germany, and can speak Latin, Polish, German, French and Hebrew. And she's studying Italian and Spanish, too.

London Pact Is Formally Signed

Frank B. Kellogg, the United States ambassador, did not sign as America was only an observer at the London reparations conference. He was present,however.

"Well, I am glad it is over," commented the American ambassador, "now the Dawes plan is effective at once."

The ceremony took place in the ambassador's waiting room. There were no speeches.

Sir Eyre Crowe signed for Great Britain. The high commissioners signed for the British overseas dominions.

"I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they afforded great relief. I continued the treatment and after using three cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment I was completely healed." (Signed) Miss E. Rutherford, R. F. D. 1, Box 5, Gallipolis, Ohio.

U. S. Bankers Offered Loan on Condition

AMSTERDAM, Holland, Aug. 30.—It was reported from Berlin today that American bankers agreed to advance a loan of 500,000,000 gold marks to German industrialists on condition the Reichstag ratified the Dawes reparations plan. This was the chief reason, it was said, why the German Nationalists backed down.

To The Visiting Klansmen

WITHIN the corporate limits of Coshocton this afternoon and evening are several thousand strangers, representatives of near-by and remote Ohio counties, American citizens all, and as such thrice welcome to the best city of 12,000 population in the state.

As individuals these visitors are entitled to every courtesy that a town famed for its hospitality can extend. If sickness or accident befall any of them, from the least to the greatest, we feel sure that every kind attention, every possible service will be rendered. We have here an industrial district composed of factories whose products are as unusual as they are varied and a visit to these concerns is equivalent to a liberal education. We have a retail mercantile district quite up to the standards of cities twice this size. We have a city of substantial, well kept homes due to the fact that we have many home owners and few tenants.

To the best we have, as individuals and members of a common country, you are welcome. We hope it shall not be said after our guests are gone that a single resident of Coshocton has been lacking in the ordinary amenities of life in his demeanor toward "the stranger within thy gates."

So much for our attitude toward individuals. With the Ku Klux Klan, the most grotesque and indefensible organization which has arisen above the social and political horizon of America in seventy-five years, this paper has no sympathy. We do not harbor the concern about it that is expressed in so many quarters for the sufficient reason that if those who are concerned will take the time to review the history of American politics, even in the most cursory manner, they must inevitably be convinced that the Klan is as ephemeral as any of its political prototypes in the past. The rapidity of its rise will only be surpassed by the haste of its dissolution.

That the Klan enrolls in its membership thousands of well meaning people we have no doubt. That these same people were mistaken when they joined and later will learn that they have been deceived as to the actual and potential power of this organization to accomplish any good end, we feel equally sure. The preambles of similar organizations in the past abounded with the same high purposes and splendid aims. The desire on the part of many people to join in the uplift movement was just as keen then as now. In each instance the urge to political action became stronger and stronger—and in the end the same political grave will envelop them all.

In the place of its birth the Klan is already crumbling. One cannot conceive of two weaker candidates for public office than Walton for Senator from Oklahoma and "Ma" Ferguson for Governor of Texas. Walton was a political misfit and with so poor an official record that he was properly impeached in his own state. Mrs. Ferguson who ran for the gubernatorial nomination as a "vindication" of her impeached husband has no record of public service and no special intellectual qualities commending her to the Texas electorate.

The sole issue on which both of them pulled thru was their outspoken opposition to the Klan. For aught we know better candidates in both primaries were defeated solely because of their allegiance to the Klan. For the first time in two American commonwealths the hooded issue was clearly drawn on a large scale and in both instances the verdict of present-day America was what it has always been when mushroom organizations of this kind are exhibited succinctly to the public eye and their character adequately appraised before the bar of public opinion.

With all their imperfections our institutions are still satisfactory to a goodly majority of our people. Thus far we have got along fairly well with our courts, administrative officials and legislative bodies. To this time America has not urgently felt the need of any secret order to serve in an extra-judicial or super-administrative capacity. So far our people have been content to rest any case that has yet arisen on the legal foundation established by the Declaration of Independence and our federal and state organic laws.

Coshocton city and county are miniatures of the Republic at large. We have in this community Negroes, Hebrews and Catholics, the pet aversions of the Klan. Protestants here for more than a hundred years have dealt in Catholic stores. Catholics have hired Protestant contractors. Jews have builded flourishing mercantile establishments. We know of no instance in Coshocton where any man has been denied a fair deal in the courts or has been discriminated against socially, politically or industrially because of creed or color. This is at it should be and has been due to a heart-felt loyalty to the spirit of our institutions.

Coshocton in all that time has no more felt the need of a secret order to regulate its private morals or public conduct then has the nation at large. Racial and creedal distinctions have not been manifested. There has been in this community no proscribed class. We have gone forward because, by and large, each man has attended to his own business and has not assumed the despotic role of judge, jury and witness in regard to his neighbor's shortcomings. Sufficient to each day has been the evil thereof without adding the blight of racial and religious hatreds.

Admittedly we have not yet attained the goal of perfection. There are not the slightest indications on the eastern horizon of anything resembling the millennial dawn. With this situation for 6,000 years back the dyed-in-the-wool uplifters have not been satisfied. Most of them do not believe in evolution and accordingly they have set their hands to the moral plow with the grim and often bloody determination to go forward faster than poor, obdurate, in-bred human nature is willing to go.

But in the end they don't succeed. They arise, organize, assume the functions of both state and church, sow their dragon-teeth seeds of discord, seek political power and are at last destroyed by the Gargantuan monsters of their own creation.

For these and many similar reasons we feel no concern about the Klan, past, present, or future. We try to analyze it scientifically and in the light of a century and a half of American politics. For it we have nothing akin to fear or hatred. It has arisen out of the prejudices and extravagances, the bigotry and false propaganda of the war. With the wane of war passions it will die.

The policy of this paper has been to give the Klan due publicity in its news columns. We believe no newspaper can do less than that and fulfill the function of a forthright record of current history. But every newspaper that sets out to give responsible service to its community has another function than giving a colorless narrative of passing events. That function consists in interpreting these events as honestly and as broadly and as justly as it is humanly possible to do and in the light shed by the history of our social, religious and political institutions.

In this light, and whether mistaken or not, we can see no worthy contribution to American institutions in the birth of an organization such as the Ku Klux Klan. The past has afforded no vindication of like extraneous enterprises. We see no need for similar ventures in the present. And to the Future, which will be the judge of the Present, we are content to submit the opinion here recorded as against the Klan's ex parte opinion of its own fitness to survive.

Smiles

"Why do they call bad actors 'hams'?"

"I suppose because they're so constantly associated with eggs."

"When I was born my father called me a peach."

"Perhaps he was glad you weren't a pear."

"What are you laughing at?"

"Ha, ha! Our goat swallowed my knickerbockers?"

"How did that affect him?"

"Why her breath is coming in short pants."

"Were you ever in a railroad disaster?"

"Yes. I once kissed the wrong girl in a tunnel."

"All the pawnbrokers are leaving town, I hear?"

"That so? Where are they going?"

"Out to the 'Hocking Valley.'"

"Well, well! Did you hear about the gamblers? They're leaving town, too."

"No! Where are they going?"

"Why, to the 'Faroe Islands.'"

"We had a glorious dinner!"

"That so? What did they give you?"

"Everything you can imagine."

"Well, we had hash, too."

"Did you ever catch your wife flirting?"

"Yes. That's the way I caught her."

"Is it any harm to steal a kiss?"

"Well, I knew a young man who stole a kiss and received the full penalty."

"Hard labor for life as a husband."

"Your wife is financially interested in your business?"

"Yes."

"A silent partner, I suppose?"

"Well-er-yes—and no."

"Are there many barks on the ocean now?"

"Only those of the ocean greyhound."

"Don't you think my voice should be brot out?"

"No; pushed back."

WET TYPE OF "B" BATTERY BEST IN THE LONG RUN

Hold Up Voltage in Service and Make Quiet Reception

Carlton E. Butler, Radio Engineer

In continuing our discussion of the relative merits of the wet and dry cell type of B batteries it might be well to mention a few points of superiority the wet cell B battery possesses.

Dry cells run down so that, unless you have new batteries, you will not have a 90 volt supply from two 45-volt B batteries. You may be greatly surprised to find that both batteries read about 40 volts one day and not quite 30 a short time later.

Your set may become weaker and the reason be hard to find. If you will take a voltmeter you may find that one of the 45-volt blocks reads but ten volts. This frequently happens. Be sure to take the reading after you have been using your set fo rn hour or so. If you take the reading after the B battery has been out of service for a few hours it will probably have recuperated to such an extent that a high voltage reading will be obtained.

With the wet cell type of B batteries the gradual drop in voltage does not occur. The voltage of our battery will remain practically the same for quite a period of time. When the charge in the battery becomes exhausted your B battery will suddenly drop in voltage and your set will become inoperative.

The quietness of wet cell B batteries will be a surprise after you have used half dead dry cell B batteries on your set. The crackling and bubbling noises will be entirely absent. The use of wet B batteries on the detector tube especially will be of considerable benefit.

"HERE Y'ARE, TAKE A SHOT!" By MORRIS

ABE MARTIN On Boy Orchestras

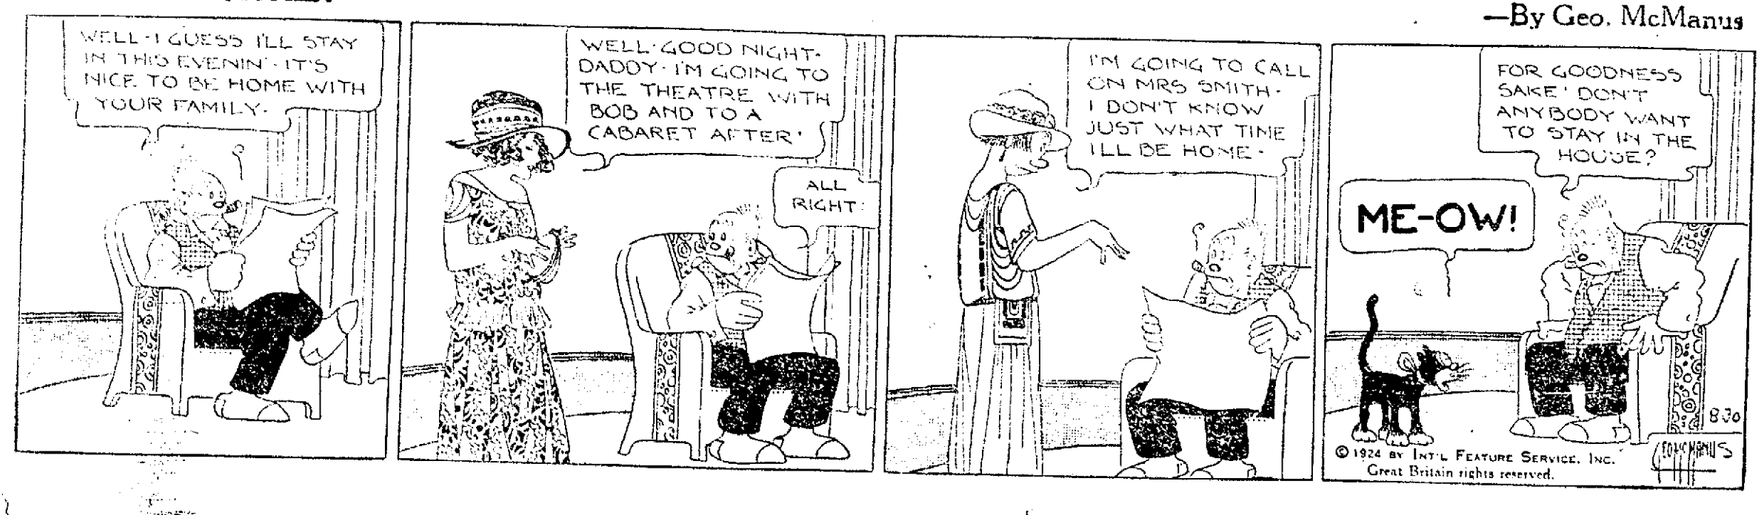

A census o' th' boy orchestras thruout th' United States has jest been completed an' th' figures are staggerin'. Unless some vigorous action is taken, an' taken immediately, t' stem th' tide o' youth in th' direction o' dance orchestras, our whole economic structure must tumble, t say nothin' o' th' regular army. Th' exodus o' kids an' young men from th' useful walks o' life t' th' saxophone alone mounts well int' th' hundreds o' thousan's while those who are devotin' th' golden, habit formin' years of ther lives t' trombones an' trap drums may easily be surmised since wherever ther's a saxaphone th' drums an' trombone are hard by. Employers o' child labor are complainin' bitterly, while parents who wish t' make dentists an' plasterers o' ther sons are wringin' ther hands. An' this present day craze among boys t' join slap bang orchestras is drivin' our girls int' th' professions. Instead o' prowlin' about durin' th' long summer evenin's with girls on ther arms, fully eighty per cent of our boys may be seen dartin' here an' there carryin' bass drums, fiddle boxes an' horns. An' what kind o music are they makin'? We saw a fine promisin' lookin' boy buyin' a stiff hat for his trombone th' other day with money his father had given him, not fer mowin' th' lawn or washin' th' car, but jest out o' th' goodness of his heart. We know his dad an' he's a fine, conscientious cement mixer an' wears a cap daily an' Sunday. Th' saxophone is an ole time musical instrument, an' fer many years, or up t' th' time jazz got prominent, it had no standin' whatever in decent, ear respectin' musical organizations, but t'day its low, degradin' notes predominate at all dances. We don't know how true it is, but we've heard that these jazz orchestra boys make three dollars an hour while they last. But what o' th' future years, but what o' th' day o' reckonin' when ther orchestra days are over, when they're tossed int' th' arena o' life with nothin' t' commend 'em but an ear fer noise? Gittin' stuck on a musical instrument is different from any other diversion. We kin have most any other kind of a hobby an' still study law, or medicine, or learn a trade, or excel as a bookkeeper, but becomin' endeared t' a musical instrument destroys in intiative, an' th' ambition t' tred th' nobler walks o' life.

Harris Has High Confidence in Senator's Spirit

NEW YORK, Aug. 30—"The spirit of our club is a wonderful thing and if we do not win the American league pennant it will not be due to neglect by the players," said Stanley Harris, the young second baseman who has managed the Washington Senators to the top of the American league. Today the Senators were leading by a game and a half—a margin gained over the world's champion Yankees right in the latter's own back yard.

Two more contests of a four-game series remain to be played and Harris, in discussing the chances of his team, pointed to the fact that George Mogridge, the club's best left hander, has not yet worked in this series and is ready to take a shot at his former team mates.

"erhaps we have been a bit more fortunate than our rivals," said Harris, "because our club is intact. There are no injured ball players and our pitchers have reached their best condition of the season.

"We want to win and we have the spirit to win. There is nothing like determination to carry a baseball club along. Team spirit and fight are worth more than any team of all stars. The Senators have those attributes and it will be hard for any club to bar our way now that we are out in front.

"We finish the season away from home, but so do the Yankees. That does not matter so much any more, tho. The club is a good one on the road and it will give a good account of itself.

"Take a look at the grand workmanship of Walter Johnson this season. His work never was better. If we win out it will be due as much to his individual efforts as to anything else."

STATIONMASTER'S HOPES TO GREET PRINCE LOST

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—W. H. Egan, stationmaster at the great Pennsylvania terminal in New York was all dressed up this morning to greet the Prince of Wales when the royal special pulled into the station on his way to Washington. He wore a long-tailed coat, resplendent with brass buttons, and wanted to show the prince around the station.

The prince, however was sleeping. Egan was disappointed.

New York Stock Market

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Stock prices were uniformly higher in the short session of the stock market today and trading in the first hour was more aggressive than either of the two preceding days. Stocks that were pressed for sale on Thursday and Friday were in demand today, partly by the overcrowded short interest and partly by long traders. Wall street attendance was restricted, but buying orders flowed into the street from important outside speculative centers.

Steel, copper and motor shares were leaders in the upward movement, but a number of railroad and specialty stocks participated. Cast Iron Pipe was foremost in the latter group, with an advance to a new high for the year. Railroad stocks were led by Chesapeake & Ohio, New York Central, the St. Pauls, Pere Marquette, Frisco and Southern railway, all of which were again near the high point for the week. Maxwell, Pierce Arrow, White, Willys-Overland and Mack truck in the motor group, U. S. Steel, Crucible, Vanadium Gulf States and Republic in the steel stocks, U. S. Smelting, Cerro de Pasco, Chile and Utah in the coppers were conspicuously active and strong. It was a complete reversal of form as far as general trading was concerned.

Reports that some of the big oil companies are offering premiums above market prices for long term contracts for delivery of crude oil; and that the gasoline market had shown considerable improvement in the last few days, helped to strengthen the position of oil stocks. Pan American on heavy trading, Cosden Oil rallied from 25 to 26½ and Producers and Refiners from 27⅛ to 29⅛.

The better outlook for Wilson & Co., was reflected in the moderate market for the Wilson stocks today.

Mercantile stocks also staged a moderate rally with Mercantile Pfd. at 42 and American International around 25.

Good Night Stories
By Blanche Silver
Illustrated by Madge Geyer

DAVID MEETS A BUSY LITTLE WORKER.

DAVID almost stopped breathing when a glorious red-spotted, purple butterfly settled on a low branch of the apple tree above his head.

It certainly was a beautiful butterfly. In coloring it was a deep purplish-black, with rows of white dots along the borders of its wings. Underneath it was a most beautiful reddish-brown. The sunlight on the fairy creature's wings made them iridescent.

"Oh, you beautiful, beautiful butterfly!" David whispered, almost afraid of frightening the beautiful creature away. "What kind of butterfly are you?"

"Who, I?" asked the butterfly. "Is it me that you're calling beautiful? I suppose you are flattering me so you can get close enough to catch me." And she held herself ready to sail away at a second's notice.

"Indeed, you are mistaken," said David softly. "I have never yet tried to catch a butterfly. I think they are too pretty and happy to make prisoners. But I would love to know your name."

"And you shall know," laughed the butterfly. "I am Mrs. Red-spotted Purple, at your service. I'm certainly glad that there are some little boys who won't harm us. But, goodness, I mustn't chatter so, for this is my busy day. I'm laying eggs."

"What! On the apple tree?" exclaimed David. "I always thought you butterflies laid your eggs on flowers."

"This Is My Busy Day."

"Not red-spotted purple butterflies," replied the little creature. "I always choose either an apple, pear or cherry tree on which to lay my eggs. They are not in so much danger on those trees.

"Right here on the very end of a leaf I shall lay them," and Mrs. Red-spotted Purple Butterfly placed a tiny little egg on the tip-end of a pointed leaf.

"Now, in just about three days," she added, "the eggs will hatch and I'll have a nice family of caterpillars. They are such cunning little things and so tidy. They eat up the egg-shells after they are hatched."

"How long will it be before they turn into butterflies?" asked David.

"Oh, several weeks," replied Mrs. Red-spotted Purple. "They change their coats four or five times before they begin spinning their webs—"

"Spinning webs!" David interrupted. "Do your children spin webs?"

"Certainly they do," laughed the butterfly. "These youngsters will spin on the bark of this apple tree. Then they'll catch their hind legs in the web and hang, head down, until it is time for them to turn into butterflies.

"Generally it takes about ten days for the final change. Do you know that the caterpillars hatched from the eggs I lay in the Fall have to build a hard case over themselves and sleep until spring?

"These eggs that I'm putting here now will go through all the changes that make them over into butterflies in less time, because the weather is warm.

"Now, if you'll excuse me, I'll be on my way."

Without waiting for a reply, Mrs. Red-spotted Purple Butterfly spread her wings and sailed off through the orchard.

Revelations of a Wife

Why Madge Had a Sudden Pang as She Brought Mollie Fawcett Into Her Home.

WHENEVER I approach the old farmhouse which Dicky and I have transformed into the sort of home we both like, I always feel a little quickening of my pulses, and a sensation of warmth such as one has when coming suddenly into the sunlight, or drawing near to an open fire. It is as if the old house were sentient, and returned to me the very real affection I bear it.

The moment of my arrival with Mollie Fawcett was no exception to the rule. The jealousy and mental disturbance of my journey home vanished somewhere between the gate and porch, and it was with a mind nearer peace than I had dreamed possible that I turned to the girl beside me, and said cordially:

"Welcome to our home, Miss Fawcett."

She was looking around her with widespread interest, but she turned to me instantly.

"Thank you," she said earnestly. "I have never seen a house that looked so like a real home before—the real home I have read about. I have never known one, you know, for I have always lived in the city."

The Winning of Junior.

"It is I who should thank you for that pretty speech," I smiled, and then the door was thrown open tumultuously, and Junior rushed out so fast that he would have tumbled down the steps into an ignominious heap had not I caught him in my arms, lonesome for the clutch of his tiny hands even though so short a time had elapsed since I had seen him.

The door behind him appeared filled with heads, for Katherine and Marion, with Katie close behind them, were standing in it, and as Junior after kissing me rapturously voiced his never-failing question, "What did you bring me, Mama?" I saw all three pairs of eyes fixed in amazement—and admiration upon the vision of youthful loveliness by my side.

"Ma-ma, did you bring me a little boy to play wif?"

Junior's voice rose insistently, and there was a threat of tears in it. Ever since the departure of his cousins, the Harrison children, Junior has mourned them, and especially has he misled Roderick, the youngest of the four. Persistently he has demanded "another little boy."

"Wouldn't a big girl do?"

It was Mollie Fawcett's lilting voice that asked the question, and the next second she had gone down on her knees beside Junior, who, clinging to my skirts after I had put him down, looked at her with the curious appraisement of childhood.

"I can play just as well as a little boy," she coaxed, "and besides, I know lots of stories little boys don't know."

"You're So Pretty!"

That she was one of those rare women whose understanding of the child mind is so innate and thorough as to appear uncanny, I knew when I saw Junior move toward her almost as if hypnotized.

"Will you tell me a story now?" he demanded.

I was amazed at the storm of jealous fury that suddenly swept over me at the sight of my small son in the circle of those slender arms watching her lovely face with eager expectant eyes. It was the same look he always gave me when I promised him a story. For Junior is a miniature Schariar, who would tax the powers of a dozen Scheherazades. But honesty compelled me to admit that he bestowed the same rapt gaze upon Katherine or Marion or his grandmother or even Katie when a story was in question.

I knew that it was not my small son's apparent desertion of me which stung, but the fact that he so quickly had yielded allegiance to Mollie Fawcett, and it needed only his hand uplifted to touch her face and his awed murmur, "You're so pretty, just like a picture," to whip my nerves into a state where I was not quite responsible for anything I might say or do.

Had my small baby boy inherited the temperament of his father and the inordinate admiration of beauty whether of sky, of flowers or of women's fair faces, which had made Dicky so unstable?

It was Katherine who saved me from betraying my secret feeling and forever after being bowed to the dust in humiliation, Katherine whose profession it has been for so long to watch for the danger signals thrown out by frayed nerves. I saw her stoop to Marion's ear and then come swiftly down the steps, followed by Lillian's winsome young daughter.

"Madge, dear!" she said throwing her arms around me, an exaggerated greeting which I knew was meant solely to keep my face against her shoulder that Mollie Fawcett might not read and interpret the expression upon it. "How glad I am to see you! Lillian telephoned you were on the way, and breakfast is almost ready for you. That's right, Marion. Take Junior to gather the eggs. You shall have the story very soon, Junior, but just now run quick and get some nice fresh eggs for Mother's breakfast."

Evening Gown Simplicity Makes Lovely Accessories Truly Important

By ANNETTE BRADSHAW

THE evening gowns of the season are relatively simple, either filmy layers of chiffon or straight sheaths of satin beaded in rhinestones and pearls.

Because of this smart simplicity, the accessories which make the evening outfit more interesting still are of paramount importance. The happy choice of the right rose, or string of beads, or jeweled pin can make the costume one of striking individuality.

Interesting accessories are shown above. They include jeweled ornaments for the hair, interesting beads and a shoulder rose, as well as slippers of unique cut and ornamentation.

At the left we have a jeweled barpin to hold the tresses of the bobbed-haired miss in place. This serves a useful mission, for if bobbed hair shows the side part the loose ends are very likely to drop down over the eye unless they are caught back with some becoming catch. This barpin is a long, slim affair of rhinestones.

Next to this is shown a most effective string of pink coral beads, long enough to be wrapped around the neck several times. These are worn with a white chiffon dress, and the only other color touch appears in the deeper-tinted pink rose caught in the beads at the right shoulder.

The girl at the right, who clings to her long tresses, arranges them in braided wheels at the sides, and thrusts jeweled pins into the center of each wheel.

YOUR HEALTH
Watch Your Diet Wisely and Weigh What You Should

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.,
United States Senator from New York,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

DR. COPELAND

WHAT do you consider the surest health rule? If there were a lot of doctors with me as I write, I should ask each one to give me his opinion. I wish they were here, but anyhow I'll venture to express my opinion. It is this:

The surest guarantee of long life lies in temperate eating.

Thomas Carlyle was a great philosopher, rather cynical at times, it must be confessed. He said lots of things I don't believe, but here is one of his statements which I applaud:

"Most men dig their graves with their teeth."

You can learn a lot about people by watching them. Of course you won't spy on anybody, but casual observation will teach you many important lessons.

Almost always the individual who enjoys his meals to the utmost, who takes "just a little more" of this and that, who never fails to accept a helping or two of every dish, who wants the recipe of some particularly rich concoction—that individual is above the normal weight and is on the way to dangerous obesity.

I admire plumpness. Reasonable plumpness is to be preferred above scrawniness. But the plumpness of thirty is too apt to result in the burdensome fatness of fifty or sixty if we don't watch out.

Over-eating and under-exercising are the causes for the overweight of most persons. Why, then, be fat?

I wish I could impress upon every reader that excess of flesh is not to be worried over because it is a damage to beauty. It means more than an ungainly figure. It means a fatty heart, fatty kidneys and a liver packed with obstructing fat, and lowered vitality. Persons who permit themselves to grow too fat have actually reduced their chances of living.

You must watch your diet and reasonably limit your intake of fats, sugar and starches. Make use of the scales. Weigh yourself at least once a week. If you find you have gained weight, reduce the fat-producing foods.

It is within your power to keep yourself fit. Laziness and self-indulgence are fatal to your figure and they will shorten your days. You cannot afford to endanger your health and prospects by unlimited indulgence.

The activities of Summer usually take off flesh. Do not permit yourself to add flesh when Summer ends. Keep up your exercises and strictly limit your eating of fat-producing foods.

WINIFRED BLACK WRITES ABOUT Marriage Agency Luck

Copyright, 1924, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

Winifred Black

WILL C. Wood, Superintendent of Instruction of the State of California, is thinking of asking the State to open and operate a State matrimonial bureau.

Mr Wood is besieged by man after man writing to ask if he can't get a nice, pretty school teacher for him to marry.

Also Mr. Wood is besieged by letters from teachers asking him if he can't find a good, big, manly man who wants to be married and give some nice, good-humored teacher a home and something to do besides teaching school.

Strange idea, this matrimonial agency business!

I knew a man once who wrote to a matrimonial agency for a wife.

The man was a well-to-do bachelor in a country town and there were plenty of girls right there in his own village who would have been quite pleased to consider marriage with him.

There was Hilda Peterson, for instance—Hilda was tall and blonde and rosy. She had hair like cornsilk and the loveliest blue eyes you ever saw, also she could drive a tractor and boss a threshing-machine gang just as well as any man.

Too Near to Be Seen.

And down the road a little farther than Hilda's, lived Mary Caldecott.

Mary was little and rather pretty and full of fun, and Mary sang in the choir and Mary made her own clothes and mighty good clothes they were, too.

Mary might have listened to the bachelor if he had learned how to speak the right sort of words to her.

North of Mary lived Judith Smith.

Judith was slim and slender, silent and a bit sanctimonious.

Judith had a class in Sunday School, and she wore her own hair in a braid till she was eighteen years old. She could make biscuits that were as light as a feather, and nobody had such geraniums in their garden as the geraniums that Judith had—she would have made an excellent wife for the lone bachelor.

Little Kitty Muggins, down by the post office, was crazy to marry—just crazy, and she wasn't in love with any particular man.

She was the widow's daughter there in the village and she was tired of always staying at home and taking care of the younger children and helping her mother sew and mend for them.

Yes, I think Kitty might have married the lone bachelor if he had been sensible enough to ask her.

He Passed Romance By.

But he couldn't see anything at all in the girls he'd known all his life. They were so commonplace, so everyday—and what he wanted was romance and plenty of it!

So he wrote to the matrimonial bureau and the bureau sent him a picture of a beauteous creature who looked like the heroine of a three volume novel, and the lone bachelor sent the beauteous creature a ticket and he went and met her at the train and she wore a veil and they went straight to the parsonage and were married.

When the beauteous creature took off her veil, she turned out to be at least fifty years old, and the lone bachelor hadn't lived with her a week before he discovered that she couldn't cook and couldn't sew and couldn't bake, and wouldn't sweep and didn't like music and wasn't going to break her back in any fool garden—and the lone bachelor wished he was dead, and all the village knew it and all the village laughed.

All except Kitty—she cried.

Romance sometimes lives right next door, doesn't it, if we only knew where to look for it.

Poor Lone Bachelor, I wonder how many times he is going to wish he'd never heard the word 'romance'!

How to Bring New Beauty to Your Ankles and Calves

By LUCREZIA BORI
The Famous Spanish Prima Donna

WELL-SHAPED legs are so often seen in young girls in their teens and early twenties, and so often these same young girls lose the firm, graceful contour of their legs as they grow older.

What is the cause of this?

Why, the answer is simply that the vigorous activities of the younger woman, as tennis playing, walking, dancing and such keep her legs in an excellent, well-rounded, firm condition.

As she grows older, she indulges in fewer and fewer of the very active exercises. Of course, most women in this day and generation walk a good deal, it is true, but so many of them neglect daily opportunities to get in healthful walking exercise.

The woman who has her own motor acquires the luxurious habit of riding everywhere she goes. If her shopping tour is to take her only a few blocks down the street, she climbs into her car and alights at the door of the shop. This is easy and pleasant, of course. It saves time, and it enables her to keep fresh and dainty longer than if she were to be jostled a bit in the crowd.

But the thing she fails to take into account is the amount of fat that is accumulated by this same luxurious habit. Her muscles grow softer and more flabby, and her legs lose their firm contour. And after all, one enjoys a motor much more when one is slim and lithe and graceful than when one is fat, for the assurance of an attractive appearance makes everything more enjoyable.

Of course there are many, many women who have no opportunity to allow their muscles to grow flabby by motoring everywhere they go. But in the city the street cars are most convenient, and dozens of women climb upon a street car to ride a few blocks, when the walk would do much for them in the way of muscle-strengthening and improving the beauty contour of their legs.

Walk whenever you can. This is my best advice to all women who want to keep young and lithe and active.

And do not make the fatal mistake of walking in high heels that contract the muscles at the back of your calves and stretch the muscles at the front of your legs. Wear sensible, low heels so your legs can get the amount of exercise they need to keep in shape.

Here is an exercise in addition. Go through the following movements every day in your own room, and insure for yourself a firm, well-rounded calf.

Stand flat on your feet.

Now rise on your toes as high as you can. When you feel you have reached your fullest height, pause and try to rise still higher.

Return your heels to the floor, and repeat until tired.

You may find it necessary to grasp the foot of the bed, or some convenient post to steady yourself.

You can derive additional exercise for the calves of your legs if you try this exercise, first throwing most of your weight in toward your big toes, then on the outer side of your feet.

Stand Flat, Then Rise on Your Toes High as You Can.

It's a rough day on the channel. You pity the passengers on the boats tossing about below. Occasionally, the plane makes a movement that reminds you of a fast dropping elevator, but it is only a moment. A lady passenger is sick up forward, but most of the passengers are business men who have made the trip many times and think nothing of it. Now you are sailing over France. They say the plane is making between sixty and seventy miles per hour and could go faster.

Somebody sights a plane ahead. It is a rival company flying the French flag and she gives us a wide berth. Airplanes are more gracious than ships. The panorama of France is spread beneath you, a nursery view which changes with great rapidity. A second hour has passed and then a half hour. Somebody sees the Eiffel tower, a dot ahead, and points excitedly. In no time Paris is seen over the horizon. The plane begins a gentle movement downward and with hardly a bump it's on the ground.

ADVICE TO GIRLS
By ANNIE LAURIE

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:
I am a girl eighteen years old and go with a young man two years my senior. I love him very much and he says he loves me. We had a quarrel a few weeks ago and we broke up. It was a small quarrel about our mothers.

Is it proper for me to give back my wrist watch which I received from him as an engagement gift?

Making the Delicious Most of the Grape Season.

WHEN our vineyard consists of one or two grape vines we don't have very many more grapes than we can eat fresh from the vines. But when we have more than that we should certainly conserve them in some of the many ways that are known for Winter use. The seeds are an objection to doing the grapes up in preserve form, yet sometimes they are spiced whole and make very good sauce to eat with cold meat in this way. Many people who have plenty of grapes cut the perfectly matured bunches and after dipping the ends of the stems in sealing wax, pack them in sawdust to keep for early Winter use. If not too ripe when picked, they usually keep beautifully. The following recipes are all tried and tested and will be found easy to follow:

Spiced Grapes.

Wash and pull four pounds of black Isabella grapes from their stems without crushing the fruit. Put a pint of water and a pound of sugar into a kettle with a good-sized spice bag, then add a teaspoonful of cloves, a few sticks of broken cinnamon and a small blade of mace. Cook gently for five minutes, skim, and add the grapes. Cook gently, skim well, and when the grape pulps are glassy looking and the preserve has cooked rather thick, remove from the fire and can as usual. Turn the cans upside down to cool and seal tightly.

Grape Catsup.

Take five pounds of ripe Concord or Isabella grapes and wash them. Then stem them and put into a kettle with a pint of water. Heat slowly, then boil gently until the grapes are soft, strain through a puree sieve, return the juice to the kettle and add to it a pint of vinegar, two pounds of sugar, and a teaspoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, allspice and a half teaspoonful each of pepper and salt. Boil gently until melted and blended, skim, then boil until the catsup is thickened to the usual consistency—then bottle, cork and seal. When cold, label and store in a cool, dry place, but not where it will freeze.

Grape Jelly.

Wash, stem and place five pounds of ripe black grapes in a preserve kettle with a cupful of water. Melt slowly and cook gently until the grapes are soft, then turn them into the jelly bag and drip until slightly cool. Put on rubber gloves and squeeze gently until the juice has been extracted. Measure the juice, and to each pint add a half pint of sugar. Reheat, boil gently, skim carefully and try on a cold plate. When the syrup begins to jell on the cold plate it is done. Pour into hot glasses and stand to jell. When jelled, cover as usual. Sometimes it is a good idea to slice two sour apples into the kettle with the grapes when they are cooking. This supplies enough pectin to make sure the jelly will jell perfectly and it also adds a little tart flavor.
